

Does the package price include the accompanist's fee?

I am afraid not. Our in-house accompanist fee is billed separately.

In fact, Dr. Annie Lin provides her services at BPC Studio at a substantially reduced rate for anyone she collaborates on their recording project. Furthermore, her vast repertoire and superlative skill as a collaborator and recording artist makes the entire experience at the studio a positive, stress-free session. For more information, please visit www.drannelin.com for further details.

Am I paying for the accompanist while I listen to the different takes?

Yes. Both Dr. Lin and I take note of problem spots within each take's performance. She is your collaborative pianist. She needs to be just as aware of places in the score that need attention as you. Also, if there is any necessary editing, then she needs to know where to begin before a problem spot in the take and where to end. This way, we can work together to find the smoothest edit points. Dr. Lin saves clients valuable recording time (which translates into savings for you) with her experience as a collaborator compared to other accompanists.